Dr. Doppler's forecast

Front brings cooler air, high winds

A Pacific cold front will slide through the region early this morning, bringing a slight chance of morning showers and thunderstorms to the region. Strong winds are expected behind the cold front.

Temperatures will be noticeably cooler. Strong northerly winds will produce high fire dangers by this afternoon as very dry air moves in. Highs warm into the middle 70s with north winds increasing to 25 to 35 mph with higher gusts possible during the day. Critical wildfire concerns exist behind the front as humidity values drop to 10 to 20 percent during the afternoon.

Skies clear out tonight and a light freeze is possible in low-lying areas by daybreak Tuesday. Most locations drop into the 35- to 40-degree range, but if winds become calm overnight, low-lying areas may drop to between 30 and 35 degrees, resulting in a late freeze. Light winds develop overnight.

Sunshine is in the forecast Tuesday with southerly winds making a return during the day. High fire dangers are possible Tuesday as highs warm into the middle 70s. Winds become south-southeast at 15 to 20 mph during the afternoon. Humidity values drop to near 10 percent during the afternoon, promoting wildfire development during the afternoon.

Low clouds and patchy fog develop late Tuesday night with warmer overnight lows in the middle to upper 40s. Southeast winds average 10 to 15 mph.

Temperatures warm into the 80s Wednesday. Our next limited chance for thunderstorms will come Thursday as a disturbance moves across Texas.
